Famous Tales and Legends Told in Brief Form

The Lovers of Kandahar, an Afghan Romeo and Juliet Story

By J. W. MULLER

Copyright by J. W. Muller

In his "Asiatic Novels" Count Joseph Arthur de Gobineau has retold for the western world an old Persian and Afghan story which is strikingly like Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," which is being so much discussed now as part of the Shakespearean tercentenary.

His mother had named him Mohsen, meaning "The Beautiful," and he did justice to his name. There was no Afghan in all Kandahar who could match him when he rode through the narrow streets with his black hair curling under a blue and red striped turban. With deep, soft eyes that were quick to flame, he looked scornfully down on the low-born who had neither dignity nor self-respect. He knew proudly that his own honor was so dear to him that his days would not be long.

He carried death, and watched for death. Between his family of the Ahmedzys and the equally powerful Muradzys there was an age-long feud. There was another younger feud between his father, Mohammed-Beg, and uncle, Osman-Beg.

Therefore Mohsen never went unarmed. Always he bore his shield, over his back hung the long Afghan rifle and in the gay sash was a knife three feet long, four inches broad, sharp as acid and of such weight that a single blow would amputate a limb. One evening he stole into Osman-Beg's house, meaning to kill the youngest son, Elem. He grieved to do it, for Elem and he had been boyhood companions; but honor is dearer to the Afghan than ought else. He put memories behind him and went in.

"Hail to thee, son of my uncle!" said a soft voice. It was his cousin, Dschemyeh, who had watched him enter. She advanced and stood before him lovely as the dusk, in a red, gold-embroidered robe of gauze, her shining eyes and hair splendid behind a transparent veil of silver and blue. "Thou hast come to kill Elem," she said. "He is best beloved! I love him. I love thee, too. Oh, Mohsen, take me as ransom. Take me, son of my uncle. I will be thy wife. I will follow thee."

He knelt and kissed the hem of her robe. Dschemyeh lifted her little naked foot and set it on his neck. Under that touch his pride broke like glass.

Three days later Osman-Beg and his sons tore beards and hair, and wailed in their house for shame. Their beloved, their star, their Dschemyeh had fled with the son of their hated kinsman, their enemy.

Kandahar was no place where the two could hide. Before another sun had passed the avengers of blood had driven them from house to house and surrounded them in their last retreat—a ruined part of the city.

Mohsen lay behind a wall and let them approach. Dschemyeh sat by his side with his rifle. Poisoning the great knife, Mohsen leaped out suddenly and struck down the leader of his pursuers. The red knife swung again and hacked through turban and skull of a cousin.

Then he prepared to die, for they were all at him. Dschemyeh lifted the gun. At that moment a band of riders charged into the fight. They drove between him and his foes. "Osman-Beg," roared the leader, "give way. Run! Let loose thy prey, or I swear by the graves of all the holy ones that thou shalt not live!"

Suddenly Osman-Beg's band retired. The newcomer was Akbar-Khan, son of Abdullah-Khan, who governed the city for the sultan. His horsemen took the two between them and hurried them to the citadel. But Mohsen was little pleased. Abdullah and Akbar were of the stock of the Muradzys. Mohsen's life had been saved from one foe only to fall into that of another, still more bitter.

But he was an Afghan, and his mind was crafty. Scarcely had they entered the citadel before he tore himself loose and ran like a deer into the harem, where he threw himself down before the wife of Abdullah. Snatching the hem of her robe, he demanded protection.

Abdullah-Khan and his son were close on his heels, with daggers drawn. "I am an Ahmedzy!" said Mohsen. "Kill me if you will!"

Abdullah-Khan lifted his dagger. "Hold!" said his wife. "These children have gained my protection. If thou touchest them, thou lovest thine honor, and thy fame that is shining as silver will be blackened in the sight of men."

Abdullah-Khan's eyes gleamed like those of a tiger. He stood still, trembling with rage. Then he stooped and said: "Rise! Ye are my children!"

Half an hour later the sultan, stormed at by the wailing family of Osman-Beg, who was his henchman, sent word to Abdullah-Khan that Mohsen must be delivered to the avengers. In flowery language full of love, the royal emissaries assured Abdullah-Khan that disobedience meant that his life and property would be forfeit.

"I will go with ye to the sultan!" replied Abdullah. He sent for his son and in the presence of the royal messengers told him the sultan's order. "Guard the two till I return!" said Abdullah. "Thou knowest, my son, what misfortunes await us if they escape. Should they win a horse and gain the open country while I am gone, they might make good their flight! Dost thou understand me well, oh, my son?"

Akbar crossed both arms over his breast and bowed low.

Less than five minutes after his father had ridden away with the sultan's people, Akbar-Khan, Mohsen and Dschemyeh galloped out of Kandahar's gates and disappeared in the desert.

It had been done so openly that all Kandahar knew of it almost at once. Before night a great band was on their track. Pressed hard, the fugitives turned to a watch tower in a ravine, but the pursuers picked up their trail and attacked before dawn.

Akbar and Mohsen lay behind the wooden door and fired through loopholes, while Dschemyeh loaded their guns and pistols. The assailants, however, had a plentiful supply of firearms and ammunition. Bit by bit the door was riddled. Bullets began to rain into the tower.

Suddenly Dschemyeh clutched at her breast and fell. Before Mohsen could lift her, Akbar dropped, shot through the temples. Mohsen threw himself down beside Dschemyeh. The two embraced. Their lips met in a kiss. Another salvo drove through the riddled door and killed them both, even as they smiled at each other.

Count Joseph Arthur de Gobineau (1816-1882) was a French writer, diplomat and ethnologist of unusual attainments. In point of universality of accomplishment some critics compare him with men of the Renaissance who combined science and art. Gobineau's famous works are "Religions and Philosophies in Central Asia" and "On the Inequality of Human Races," two monumental products of investigation and thought that have had a determining influence. He represented France at Athens, Copenhagen, Rio de Janeiro and in Persia. It was during his years of residence there that he gathered the material for his "Asiatic Novels," which are known in English under the title "Romances of the East."

LONDON TAPS' LATEST DANCE

It's Fox Trot and Grapevine Combined, With Accentuated Steps.

Do you dance the "London Taps?"

You do if you are up to date.

For this is the dance of the hour. Because of its simplicity it is easily mastered.

Originating in New York city, despite its British name, it is simply a variation of the familiar fox trot, remarks the Boston Globe. In fact, it is merely a combination of the fox trot and grapevine steps with the addition of five taps of the foot, which are made to accentuate beats of the music. But as the grapevine steps are a trifle intricate they are often omitted and the "London Taps" then becomes a fox trot with five taps every time the music calls for them.

Thus it will be seen that the name of the dance is derived from the taps in the dance steps and not from the fact that it is supposed to be danced after taps is sounded in London.

1. As in all modern ballroom dances, the first position is the customary vis-a-vis.

2. After four walking steps the dancers take the grapevine position, the man crossing his right foot in front of his left, while the lady crosses her left foot in front of her right.

3. In the second step of the grapevine the couple has faced about, the man bringing his left foot in front of his right foot and the lady crossing her right foot in front of her left.

4. On the third step, instead of making another grapevine—as the cross steps are called—the man extends his left foot and the lady her right foot. The movement completed, the dancers take four walking steps in fox-trot time.

5. There are five accentuated stationary steps or rather taps of the feet to the count, "One, two—one, two, three." It doesn't matter whether the first tap is made with the left or right foot.

6. Here the second of the five taps is being taken on the right foot. After they have been taken the walking steps are continued until the dancers desire to repeat the grapevine steps or the taps.

Complicated Calculations.

"Has your husband quit work?"

"Yes. He has figured it out that he can save more by staying home and running the furnace economically than he can earn by going downtown."

PRIMARY BILL IS PASSED

ENTIRELY NEW BILL PASSES STATE LEGISLATURE—FIRST PRIMARY IN AUGUST.

Primaries Will Be Held By All Political Parties On Same Day—First Primary To Be Held In State First Thursday In August.

Nashville.—Amid scenes of confusion and disorder, the senate passed the primary bill as amended by the majority of the subcommittee of the election committee by a vote of 23 to 9. The bill as passed by the senate is an entirely new bill, save for the caption from the one introduced early in the session by Senator D. D. Humphreys, and known as senate bill 303, the primary bill.

The new amendment provides that both primaries, democratic and republican, shall be held on the same day; the state executive committees of the two parties are made the primary boards of the two parties; the new executive committees thereafter elected by the parties then become the primary board, and are to be elected by each party at each primary election.

Each of these boards shall have absolute control of the primaries of their parties, the county boards, however, having certain duties and powers. There shall be no run-offs except in case of ties between the two leading candidates.

The judicial and county offices are not included in the primary plan, but only the office filled at the regular November election, and the date of the primary is set for the first Thursday in August. Watchers for each candidate are provided for and it is made a misdemeanor for persons to vote in both republican and democratic primaries and is punishable by a fine of from $50 to $100.

Big Mass Meeting of Patriots.

Five thousand people from the Tri-State are expected to attend a patriotic demonstration to be held at Overton park in Memphis on the afternoon of Easter Sunday to reaffirm their loyalty to the nation.

The meeting was arranged by the Memphis Lions' club with the co-operation of nearly 2000 other civic, patriotic and commercial organizations. Speakers have been selected from the leading figures of the south. Among them are Gen. Luke E. Wright, who was a member of the cabinet during President Taft's administration; Bishop Thomas F. Gallor of the Episcopal diocese of Tennessee.

Church and schools have united to aid the movement and will attend with their pupils and parishioners.

A chorus of 500 voices is being trained to sing patriotic songs. The Memphis companies of the First Tennessee Infantry, just returned from border service at Eagle Pass, Tex., have been invited to take part in the demonstration and several troops of the Boy Scouts have accepted invitations to attend in a body.

Soldiers of the Union and Confederacy will march side by side in full uniform and military accoutrement. Veterans of the Spanish-American war will also be there in full uniform.

Governor Grants Two Pardons.

Gov. Rye has granted pardons in two cases. J. W. Watson was convicted in Putnam county in 1914 of forgery and he was sentenced to a term in the penitentiary of from three to fifteen years. There were doubts raised as to the guilt of Watson and the pardon was recommended by a judge of the supreme court to which an appeal had been made.

Harry Timmons was convicted in Shelby county in 1914 of burglary and sentenced to serve a term of 13 to 40 years for it. In November, 1915, his sentence was commuted to five years.

Adds Brown Portrait To Gallery.

A portrait of Gov. Neil S. Brown was presented to the state library on Tuesday. Judge Nathan Green of Cumberland university made the presentation. The portrait is the gift of Gen. Tully Brown, a son of Governor Brown. Governor Rye, members of the supreme court, state officials and members and relatives of the family were present.

Compensation Act Shelved.

The senate, by a vote of 15 to 14, tabled the workman's compensation act, thus finally disposing of any legislation of the kind at this session.

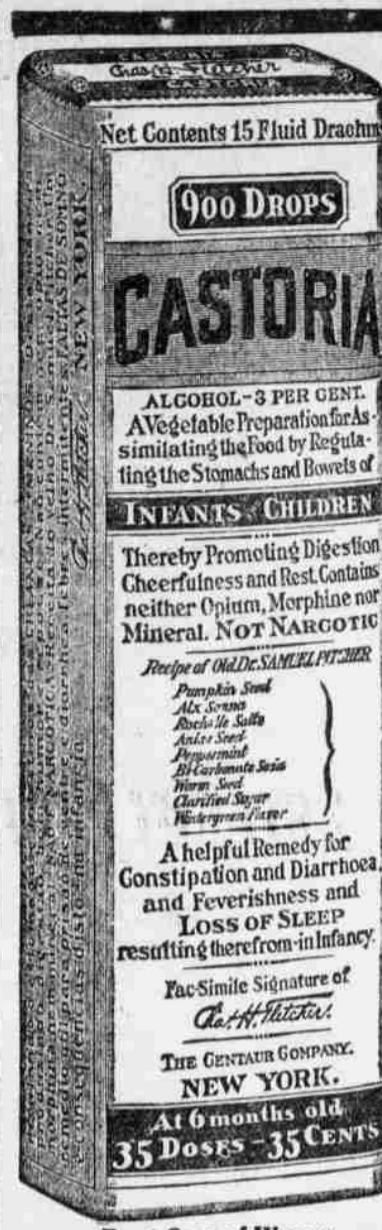

The vote came after the bill championed by the labor people had been shoved aside and a bill advocated by the manufacturers had been substituted.

Convicts Are Returned To Camp.

Three of the five convicts who cut their way to liberty through the cage at the old Capitol Camp last week were captured in a boat on Big Bluff river, near Port Gibson, Sunday afternoon by a penitentiary guard. The men were returned to the camp from which they escaped.

Three Convicts Granted Clemency.

Three pardons were issued by Gov. Rye. Brown Parham of Rhea county, convicted of selling whiskey, was relieved of an unserved portion of his six months' sentence. John Lawson, Hawkins county, convicted of beating an illegitimate child, and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary in 1915, received clemency, due to the death of his wife. Miles Wood, colored, Marshall county, convicted of larceny and given a sentence of six months.

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati man tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted off, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

A new clothesline, if boiled for a short time, will become tougher, will last longer and will not tangle.

If you have a little success don't camp on it for the rest of your life.

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription ointment—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots. Simply get an ounce of ointment—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength ointment, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

A little salt rubbed on earthenware, pudding dishes will take away brown spots.
